

GIRLS IN DANGER

There Is a Disease That Attacks Them in Their Teens.

Every Mother Should Be Able to Recognize It and Apply the Remedy.

One of the most common and dangerous diseases from which growing girls suffer is anemia or lack of blood.

It is common because the blood so often becomes impoverished during development, when girls are too frequently allowed to overstudy, overwork and suffer from lack of exercise. It is dangerous because of the stealthiness of its approach, often being well developed before its presence is recognized, and because of its tendency to grow so steadily worse, if not promptly checked, that it may run into consumption.

Mrs. C. E. Redman, of No. 132 Water street, Newburyport, Mass., who was cured of this disease, says: "When I was in my teens, I caught a severe cold. It settled all over me and that was the starting point of my illness. My health began to fail very fast. My mother took me to a number of doctors but they did me no good at all. Everyone thought that I was going into consumption. Each week I became worse until I was so completely run down that I had to give up my work. My blood was turning to water and I was pale and thin. My ears were transparent. I had no appetite and my stomach could not stand any food, even a glass of milk would upset it. An aunt, who came to visit us, took me home with her, thinking the change would do me good. I did not improve in health and was often confined to my bed, at one time for six weeks.

"One day a neighbor advised my aunt to give me Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as she knew that they were good for the blood. The pills helped me at once and in a month's time I was back home at work. Everyone looked at me in amazement to see such a change. My mother has often told me that she believes that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life. Since then I have taken the pills in the spring whenever I have felt run down. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done wonders for me and I feel that it is my duty to give this statement."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. Send today for free booklet.

APPLE CULTURE IN VERMONT

Some Suggestions Made to Possible Producers

AT THE FARMERS' MEETING

Speakers Urged upon Vermont the Advantage of Going into Apple Raising on a Sound Basis—The Speeches Summarized.

Burlington, Feb. 24.—Interesting papers were read at yesterday's meeting of farmers' week at the university of Vermont. Speaking on "The Farm Orchard," Prof. M. B. Cummings of the university of Vermont said:

"The general requirements of a farm orchard are several. A good site and a convenient location are preliminary considerations. Provision should be made for culinary and dessert use, seasonal succession including a liberal supply for winter needs, and for team cultivation and spraying so that the work may be done at the minimum expense.

"Proper location is important. Let the family orchard be located conveniently to the house; let the soil be deep, well drained, and fairly fertile; let the land be capable of good tillage, and possess a gentle slope eastward of westward; and above all select an elevated rather than a depressed area.

"Select many varieties of good quality and from the family favorites; have some early, a few medium and a liberal supply for winter use—culinary as well as dessert. Plant stone fruits, pomegranates and small fruits in quantity to suit family needs.

"Lay out the orchard on an oblong area that team work may be utilized in cultivating and spraying. Long rows, even if composed of three sorts of fruit, are time and strength savers. Small fruits may be grown between rows or in the rows of tree fruits if the land is limited in extent. Aim to give the best of care. Cultivate the soil, prune and spray the trees, and there will be a crop to harvest. Provide suitable storage by having a cool, sweet, and moderately dry room for fruits. Without good storage, half the labor of summer goes for naught."

"Harvesting and Marketing Apples" was the topic of G. W. Perry of Chester Depot, and in the course of his remarks the speaker said: "This fruit has generally been picked carelessly, in many cases shaken from the trees, left in the orchard, then poured into barrels or brought to market in bags, often in very bad shape. Now we are beginning to understand the advantages of careful picking, fine packing and intelligent marketing. The fruit should be picked as carefully as if eggs were being handled, never shaken from the trees or turned from baskets into barrels. It should be carried into cool storage in cellars or other places, handled with the utmost care in the packing, and transported on spring wagons, whether on the farm or the road.

"The barrels or boxes in which it is packed should be lined and cushioned and in every way should be made as fine as possible. This lining and cushioning costs nothing as it takes the place of more than its value of fruit. Great damage is done to the apple business by fraudulent packing largely induced by the buyer's representations. The middleman is largely to blame for apples being thus packed as he will pay more for the same fruit thus packed than he will for that honestly packed. The only remedy is to require the name of the grower or packer on every package, as is done in Canada. Why should we pack our best apples on top and poor ones in the middle? We do not pack potatoes, beans or butter thus. The apple is the king of fruits, but we treat it like a beggar; we let it shift for itself. We give it only the scraps from our tables rather than loving care."

Co-operative Work Among Farmers.

"The Trade in Young Cows," by Prof. R. M. Washburn of the state experiment station was also full of interest. He said:

"Dairying is very properly the principal farm industry in this state. There are many thousands of acres of hillside grass which can very properly be converted into money through the medium of milk, yet these large tracts of pasture lands are largely in back towns where the sale of milk as such is entirely impracticable because of distance from the railroad. I am firmly convinced that the time has arrived when the farmers in many such back towns should get together and seriously consider the proposition of co-operative community breeding of one breed. They should choose a breed which will produce most salable young cows, and raise heifer calves and develop them and breed them to meet the demands of the market. When this is done, they can advertise and sell collectively with less labor and usually at higher prices than if each farmer sold independently.

While thus converting the otherwise valueless roughage into cows to be sold to distinctive milk producers near the railroad, these back town farmers can also find excellent profit in the manufacture of butter, which often finds ready market with the same milk producing farmers. In fact, a combination back town business would be the production of cows and butter and pork to sell to those farmers who are shipping away their entire product and who therefore cannot profitably produce these things for themselves."

APPLE TREES' ANNUAL BEARING.

Varieties That Produce Under High Feeding Will Yield Yearly Crops.

Our experience has been that those varieties of apples which will produce first class fruit, especially in eating qualities, under high feeding and culture, can be made as a rule to produce annual crops of fruit, says H. O. Mend in the Rural New Yorker. But apples which for their best development will not stand too high feeding and culture, of which the Baldwin is a good example, an apple which can be fed so as to injure both its eating and keeping qualities, cannot be so changed as to grow annual crops at a profit. Our best and highest priced fruit of that variety has always been on trees well loaded (not over-loaded) with fruit. Of course part of a tree may bear one year and the barren part the following year, with first class fruit both years. Should we wish to grow commercially such apples as Baldwin and Gravenstein in equal amounts each year, namely, raise as near as possible the same amount of fruit each year for sale, we should try to do this by changing the bearing year of enough trees, either by picking the small fruit early in the season or destroying their blossoms, and we believe such method would be more satisfactory and profitable than trying to grow annual crops from the whole orchard.

And yet with the Baldwin especially I think it would require some care to prevent them gradually working back to their natural bearing year. But with that class of apples of which Williams is a good example, we should consider it both possible and practicable to raise from trees of bearing age 20 paying crops in as many years, natural as not.

We have known the Rhode Island greening to bear profitable annual crops under good care and high feeding with proper thinning, and the grower who wishes annual crops must keep in mind the fact that the trees will not stand neglect, but must have up-to-date grower knows what that means, and above all must be chosen varieties, which grow to perfection in his locality, and sell at high prices in the markets he would ship to. In fact, he must grow his heavy crops annual bearing is common even on Baldwins. Yet I never picked my prize winning fruit of that variety from such trees.
